

COOPERATION OF PUBLIC IS ASKED IN NRA

Local Merchants Declare Buyers Must Help To Further Movement.

HINT UNIFORM OPENING HOURS

Cooperation on the part of the buying public in Gettysburg and Adams county is essential to the success of the national recovery administration program as it affects this town and county, chairman of the various business groups, appointed by the Chamber of Commerce, declared at a meeting at the fire engine house, Thursday evening.

Various chairmen of the county-wide committee, of which Dr. R. D. Wickerham is general chairman, pointed out that they are willing to abide by the blanket code which they received from President Roosevelt, but that in order to make the code effective the cooperation of Gettysburg and Adams county residents is of prime importance.

Shorter Hours

The various chairmen said that to put the codes into operation will mean shorter working hours for their employees and consequently later opening and earlier closing of their business places.

"We have been slaves to the public," one committee chairman said. "People expect us to have our stores open from early in the morning until late at night."

Doctor Wickerham urged various chairmen to call meetings of groups they head and arrange a new schedule of working hours. The general chairman pointed out that while it will be impossible for every business place in Gettysburg and Adams county to open at the same time and close at the same time because of different factors affecting different businesses, each group may effect a schedule which will be satisfactory to itself and to the national recovery administrator.

8 or 9 to 4 or 5

While no specific opening and closing hours were established by the group chairmen, several of them said opening from 8 to 9 o'clock and closing from 4 to 5 o'clock would suit them and satisfy the recovery administrator.

"After we advertise our opening and closing hours, the public should fall in line and cooperate with us," a group chairman stated.

Doctor Wickerham pointed out that while enrollment in the NRA is voluntary as present later on it may become obligatory. "Even if it does not become compulsory," he said, "the public will soon begin patronizing those places which have voluntarily adopted the code."

Several of the group chairmen said they are waiting until codes, presented to the recovery administrator by national organizations to which they belong, are approved before calling meetings of their groups.

County-Wide Survey

Doctor Wickerham pointed out that the group chairmen were appointed to function county-wide and not merely for Gettysburg stores.

A number of questions regarding wages and working hours were answered by the general chairman who attended the meeting in Harrisburg, Wednesday, when General Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator, was the principal speaker.

Group chairmen at the meeting included D. C. Stallsmith, wholesalers; I. L. Taylor, banks; Dorsey Dougherty, dry goods; C. C. Reuning, bakeries; A. E. Hutchison, garages; Charles Weaver, jewelers; Mares Sherman, clothing stores; C. M. Wolf, coal, lumber and feed; W. L. Romberger, restaurants; Joseph E. Codori, gasoline and oil; Murray B. Frazee, chain stores; Raymond H. Lippy, tailors, and George F. Zerling, hardware stores.

The Gettysburg Times has been informed that the local furniture companies are now working out plans and details in order to place the plants here on an eight hour day basis, as soon as the code of the National furniture manufacturers' association, which has been submitted to the president, is finally approved.

START DRIVE TO CURB RECKLESS TRUCK DRIVING

Discourteous Commercial Vehicle Operator Is Menace, Says AAA Head.

URGES FIRMS TO INSTRUCT MEN

With truck traffic steadily increasing as the business upturn continues, bringing with it additional highway hazards, the Pennsylvania Motor federation, A. A. A., warned today that municipal authorities, the highway patrol and other agencies throughout the state are joining forces to curb reckless driving of commercial vehicles.

"The truck driver who pays little or no attention to road regulations and courtesy is a menace to all users of the highway and should be curbed," said S. Edward Gable, president of the federation. "Education of truck drivers in general courtesy and safety practices brings results in many instances, but when this fails there is only one effective alternative—arrest and imposition of the penalty provided."

Seek Goodwill

"Many concerns operating trucks spend thousands of dollars yearly on goodwill advertising," Mr. Gable stated, "yet some of these very firms let their drivers operate their trucks in a manner that makes enemies for the company at every turn. These firms fail to realize that the careful and courteous operation of their trucks not only saves life, limb and property, but creates favorable attention and goodwill that means much in a business way."

"On the rear of a big moving van along the Lincoln highway the other day I noticed this sign: 'We extend the courtesy of the road to you. Please sound your horn.' When I sounded the horn the truck pulled to the extreme right and gave me wide berth. This is a courtesy that means much."

"Police and other official records show that numerous fatal accidents are caused by trucks. Even when complying with the law to the fullest extent these heavy vehicles are difficult to manage and when they roll along at excessive speeds or 'hog' the street or highway, as many of them do, their very presence on the road is fraught with grave dangers."

1.97 INCHES OF RAIN FALL HERE

Electrical Storm Ends Eight-day Heat Wave; Little Damage Reported.

An electrical storm, accompanied by a wind of gale proportions, passed over Gettysburg, Thursday evening, and brought to an end a heat wave of almost eight days duration during which temperatures rose as high as 93 degrees.

Earlier in the evening, an electrical storm passed over the upper end of the county, bringing relief to parched farms. The upper end of the county also felt the effects of the second storm.

One and ninety-seven hundredth inches of rain fell in Gettysburg, Thursday evening, Dr. Henry Stewart, local weather recorder said. The rain was the first to fall here in eight days. Last Wednesday 1.11 inches of rain fell here.

So far as could be learned only minor damage was caused in Gettysburg or Adams county during the storm. Some growing corn and grains were levelled by the wind and rain, and a number of automobile engines were drowned by the deluge.

At the local civilian conservation corps camp one mess tent fly was blown down but this was soon replaced and no damage was reported.

Charles H. Kenlan, an inspector for the first, second and third corps areas, under Director Pechner, visited the camp shortly before the storm and then decided to remain here all night. He left early this morning.

YOUNG FARMER ELECTROCUTED DURING STORM

George B. Livingston, 33, Comes In Contact With A Live Wire.

WAS HELPING HIS BROTHER

Coming in contact with a wire fence charged with electricity from a high-voltage line which was blown across it during the first of two storms which passed over Adams county Thursday evening, George B. Livingston, 33, farmer, residing in York county along the East Berlin-Dillsburg road, a few miles north of East Berlin, was fatally burned dying within a few minutes.

The first storm swept over the upper end of Adams county shortly after 6 o'clock, and passed on over the western end of York county.

Helping Brother

It was during the first storm that Livingston met death. He was helping to push a truck operated by his brother, Edward I. Livingston, from a ditch by the side of the road when he came in contact with a heavily charged wire fence. He was knocked unconscious and almost before he could be carried to his home, only fifty feet away, death occurred. Dr. Eugene Elgin, of East Berlin, was called but was unable to render any aid.

During the heavy wind storm, a large pine tree in front of the Livingston residence was blown across the highway, blocking traffic. A part of the tree fell across a high tension electric line said to carry 2,300 volts, a branch line between Bermudian and Kraitown. While one end of the wire, directly in front of the Livingston home, continued to emit sparks and flashes of electricity, the other end was thrown across the road over a woven wire fence.

Found Lying In Ditch

Following the storm, Mr. Livingston and his helper on the farm, John Myers, went to work with axes to attempt to clear the road so that traffic could pass. He had only been working a short time when his brother, Edward, who lives only a short distance away, approached in his truck to get some one to help him repair damage wrought by the wind on his own farm.

Seeing his brother busy, he attempted to turn his truck around in the road. Backing across the highway, the rear wheels of his vehicle slipped into the soft ground at the side of the road, and the truck stuck in the mud. George went to his brother's assistance and pushed the truck while Edward sat in the driver's seat and applied the power.

Several unsuccessful attempts had been made to get the truck from the ditch when Edward stepped from the vehicle and found his brother lying face downwards in the ditch. While he had heard no crash of thunder, he first thought lightning might have struck the prostrate man.

Wire Fell On Fence

He next thought of the fallen electric power line and of the possibility that his brother had in some manner come in contact with it. He tried to resuscitate him, at the same time calling for help. When his efforts brought forth no response, he and William R. Myers, Morris Gochenour, W. E. Harbold and William Chapman, who reside nearby, carried George into the house. Joseph Gochenour, another neighbor, called Doctor Elgin, at East Berlin. When the doctor arrived, he found life extinct and notified Coroner L. U. Zech, who later signed the death certificate.

While no one actually saw Livingston come in contact with the fence, employees of the electric light company, who later repaired the break, found one end of the broken wire in contact with the fence, about a hundred feet from the scene. At just about the time Livingston is believed to have touched the fence, Carl Ferre, of Perry county, a tourist who was halted by the falling tree, said he heard a hissing sound and saw sparks jump from the fence at another point. He did not see Livingston, however.

Current Cut Off

Had Livingston touched the wire a few minutes later, he probably would not have been harmed as current in the broken wire had been cut off. A crew of repairmen from Dillsburg had arrived at the Livingston home and seeing the broken wire, had immediately gone to Bermudian to pull a fuse and interrupt the flow of current.

The dead man is survived by his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Wiley Livingston; four children, Arthur B. 11, Gilbert, 9, Romaine, 8, and John. (Continued on Page 2)

PLAY-OFF TILT SUNDAY, 2:30

Locals Meet McSherrystown
On Foreign Lot To Decide First-half Title.

The long anticipated series between McSherrystown and Gettysburg for the first half championship of the Adams county firemen's baseball league will get under way Sunday afternoon, at McSherrystown, at 2:30 o'clock.

Injuries continue to take their toll on the Gettysburg team, Noel Flynn wrenching his knee in a twilight game this week, which will keep him out of the game for some time. "Artie" Buehler and "Piney" Bender are out of action, nursing broken bones.

The recent signing of Glenn "Yockey" Bream and Howard "Mugsy" Hartzell, stars for the Gettysburg Old Timers, will do much to plug the vacancies. Both players are eligible for the play-off games as well as the league tilts.

McSherrystown, victors four times in as many starts against the locals this season, are confident of repeating these triumphs. "Boss" Groft, an old Gettysburg jinx, will probably draw the rueling assignment for Manager Noel's nine in the opening clash.

No announcement has been made as to the starting pitcher for the local crew, but it is expected that either "Bud" Knox or Ross Sheely will do the hurling.

Saturday's Games

Another important game faces Gettysburg, Saturday afternoon, when they meet the fast-moving New Oxford nine at New Oxford. At present the Keller-coached team is deadlocked with Arendtsville for first place in the second half race, a half game ahead of New Oxford.

Arendtsville will endeavor to continue its fast slip when it entertains Fairfield Saturday afternoon. Carl Kane's hustlers have recently regained their batting eyes and loom as potential second-half champs.

McSherrystown journeys to Bendersville and Cashtown visits Centennial in the other league tilts, Saturday.

By Noted Surgeon At Rochester, Minn.

Rochester, Minn., Aug. 4 (AP).—Guards told by Dr. Charles H. Mayo, one of the distinguished Mayo brothers, to "shoot first and make explanations afterward" patrolled the family estate after what he said was an attempt to kidnap one or more of his grandchildren.

The order was given after a nursemaid said a man tried to force entrance into the nursery in which slept the three children of his son, Dr. Charles W. Mayo. The children range in age from 2½ to 6 years.

"In cases like this I recommend shooting first and making explanations afterward," the eminent surgeon said.

The nurse, Miss Marie Langseth, said she was awakened early Tuesday by the sound of an automobile approaching the younger Dr. Mayo's home at Maywood, the estate three miles from here. She believes the engine had been shut off after the car reached a nearby hill and that the car coasted into the yard.

Miss Langseth, who sleeps in the second floor nursery with the children, said the man walked almost noiselessly to the rear of the home and tiptoed up a rear stairway to the second floor.

Then, she said, he turned the knob of the door, which was locked. She shouted, "Who's there?" and the man ran to the automobile, which sped away.

La Guardia Will Oppose Tammany

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—The republican majority committee unanimously endorsed Congressman Fiorella H. LaGuardia today as the fusion candidate for the mayor of New York.

Approval by the committee gives LaGuardia assurance of almost unanimous support of all anti-Tammany factions in the fall campaign.

vehicle he is driving knows he is violating the law. This also holds good for the "road hog." Many drivers, however, do not realize that in following another truck too closely they are violating the law, which provides that "the operator of any commercial vehicle, when traveling upon a highway outside of a business or residence district, shall not follow another such vehicle within one hundred feet."

"The state highway department and the motor patrol are steadily on the alert in their campaign against the motor truck that fails to comply with the law. The firms that operate trucks, the general motoring public, the individual driver and the local officers can be of material aid in this campaign. If the firms with trucks on the road will instruct their drivers to comply with the law at all times and if the drivers abide by these instructions the highways will be safer, driving for both the truck operator and the motorist will be more pleasant and the authorities will have a much easier time in enforcing the law. If these steps fail, however, the owner of the truck and the operator must be held liable for any infractions of the law."

Manager Reports "Understanding"

McCormick could not be reached in Chicago for comment but his secretary denied the report.

While her manager in Paris said there was "an understanding" between Miss Negri and the 61-year-old McCormick, the actress denied they were engaged.

Miss Negri said she and the former husband of the late Edith Rockefeller McCormick were "very good friends," that she was fond of him and found him charming.

As in the days before his marriage to Mme. Walska—the opera singer turned Paris perfumer—McCormick sends flowers and cablegrams to Miss Negri, her manager said.

Miss Negri is said to be for America on September 4.

McCormick was divorced from Mme. Walska last year by default in Chicago. When she left the western metropolis three years ago, after walking out on a debut at the Civic opera, Mme. Walska said the Chicago winters were too cold.

For months there was talk of a reunion and the divorce was something of a surprise. Later, during the long illness of his first wife, the daughter of John D. Rockefeller, rumors were frequent of a remarriage. McCormick was at her bedside when the ruler of Chicago's society for years died.

The black-haired, hazel-eyed Miss Negri was married to Prince Serge Mdivania in 1927 after her divorce from Count Eugene Donski, Polish army officer. This match also ended in divorce four years ago. The Georgian prince now is the husband of Mary McCormick, the opera singer.

Mrs. Potter retired to the Riviera after she left the stage. Her daughter, the former wife of James A. Stillman, now is married to Fowler McCormick.

POST IS DOWN AT CUMBERLAND

World-girdling Record Holder Forced To Land Because Of Storm.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 4 (AP).—Wiley Post, record-holding around-the-world flyer, was forced to land at Mexico field, an airport near here, shortly after 8 o'clock Thursday night by a heavy rainstorm which swept over the mountains.

He was flying the Winnie-Mae, in which he made his record flight around the globe, and made a perfect landing.

Accompanied by Larry Frederickson, of New York, he left that city at 3:35 p. m. Wednesday and was headed for Dayton, Ohio, en route to his home in Oklahoma City.

He registered here at the Fort Cumberland hotel with Frederickson and said he expected to get off early Thursday morning.

While having dinner in his hotel room, after leaving word that he was not to be disturbed, Post described the reasons for landing as follows:

"I was flying north of Cumberland and I saw a storm and I didn't like it and I wasn't going to fly into it. So I turned around and saw the lights of Cumberland and headed for the landing field."

Silent On His Plans

"I am going to leave here as soon as I can get out in the morning, because I am anxious to get home." Post declined to discuss his plans after reaching Oklahoma City, but it was understood he expects to go to the West Coast to make some plane tests in the near future.

CLOUDBURST, BREAK IN DAM FLOODS DENVER

5,000 Driven From Homes As Water
Rushes Through
Colorado City.

THREE DEAD; FIVE MISSING

Denver, Aug. 4 (AP).—Crumpling under the pressure a mountain cloudburst added to the three square miles of water behind its walls, Castlewood Dam sent a billion-gallon deluge roaring through Denver Thursday, leaving two dead and damage estimated at $1,000,000 in its thirty-five mile path of destruction.

Five persons are missing and a separate storm claimed the life of a woman to bring the death list to three.

Two miners, who had been working below the dam, were missing. Their flood-wrecked camping equipment for food when the water subsided. An unidentified family of three persons could not be located, and the site where they camped last night was inundated.

Franktown, a village on a hillside four miles below the dam, was the first center of population to be struck. Then the flood swept on six miles to Parker, at times on a mile-wide front, and picked up tons of debris as it swirled into suburban Denver and sent Cherry Creek on a rampage through the heart of the city.

With cracking of the rock-filled irrigation reservoir dam, 43 years old, the loosed flood waters quickly converted the fertile valley farmlands into a mud-splattered slough.

Cops and Firemen Give Alarm
Warned of the flood, Denver police and firemen, with sirens going full blast, speeded through the country club residential district warning everyone in the lowland area to flee from their homes. Emergency ambulance corps moved in to safety.

A separate cloudburst, one of four rainstorms and five hailstorms that hit southeastern Colorado in the last twenty-four hours, took the life of Mrs. Claude Hill, 50, when her ranch home in the Matheson region was washed several hundred yards off its foundation. Her husband and seven children escaped.

The Castlewood Dam dead were Mrs. Bertha Catlin, 21, a ranch worker, who was thrown from her horse into a flooded creek, and Tom Casey, 80, of Denver, who drowned in the rear of a Denver home.

Crop losses will be enormous and hundreds of head of livestock drowned. Highways and bridges were damaged heavily.

Thousands of persons, probably 5000 in Denver alone, were driven from homes.

PLANE FALLS IN OLD CANAL

Middletown Air Depot Pilot
Escapes With Scratch
On Thumb.

Harrisburg, Aug. 4.—The pilot of a tri-motored army transport airplane escaped with a scratched thumb Thursday when the plane dropped from a height of 150 feet, swarmed under high tension wires and crashed into the old Pennsylvania canal near the Middletown air depot.

Daniel Moler, private in the air corps, was piloting the ship, which had been assembled at the depot Tuesday, on a test flight, the fourth he made in it Thursday. As the plane moved toward the landing field at a height of 150 feet, the motors stalled. Moler started pumping fuel but his efforts to start the motors failed and the ship started toward the ground.

Dodges Power Wires
Realizing that a crash was unavoidable, Moler snapped off the ignition switch as the plane darted toward the high tension wires leading from the Metropolitan-Edison company plant. Skimming past the wires, the plane headed into the canal bed. One wing struck a tree on the twenty-foot west bank. The impact turned the plane completely around and it crashed into the canal bed, the banks breaking the fall and preventing a nose-dive.

The noise of the crash attracted hundreds of persons and nearby residents of Middletown summoned firemen from the air depot.

The wings and fuselage of the plane were demolished. The landing gear was stripped off and one propeller was bent but the motors apparently were not damaged.

Moler crawled from the wreckage and signaled to the pilot of another ship that he was not injured. A scratch on the thumb and marks which the accident left on ripped trousers were the only injuries.

A mule, said to be 25 years old, has been pulling ore cars a mile underground for 19 years in a mine near Grass Valley, California.

Sherman Returns 2 Pigs 'Stolen' From Jeff Davis In Civil War

Washington, Aug. 4 (AP).—Two Washington, D. C.

pigs were solemnly delivered to a young southern officer at the war department Thursday at the instance of a brother-officer and descendant of General William T. Sherman to replace a pair stolen by Sherman's raiders in the march to the sea.

Dignified officials were amazed when a crate containing two fat Poland-China pigs was lugged to the office of Captain Thomas Jefferson Davis, aid to the chief of staff.

An accompanying letter told the story, Captain Davis had often taunted Lieutenant John B. Sherman, a grandnephew of General Sherman, about the pigs the latter's forces had taken from the Davis estate in the swing from Atlanta, and the conscience-stricken lieutenant was making restitution for his distinguished relative.

Wrote Lieutenant Sherman, who is now stationed with the Sixteenth Brigade, in Washington:

The HIDDEN DOOR

By FRANK L. PACKARD

SYNOPSIS: Colin Hewitt, writer of detective fiction, has plunged himself into one of his own plots. Before Reddy Turner was killed by the Mask, underworld czar. Colin promised Reddy to deliver a mysterious letter for him. Colin was trapped by one of the Mask's killers in Reddy's room when he went for the letter, but escaped. He reads the note accompanying the letter he is to deliver, and learns that the sealed envelope is to be given to Joe Lazzare, who lives on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, near a town called Cap a l'Orage. Lazzare is an employee of the Mask, so the letter must be delivered secretly. Colin decides to leave at once, partly to evade the Mask, who is on his trail.

Chapter 11

UNDER COVER

Listen! I've found out that the Mask has got some "interests" down that way, though what they are I don't know. So if you want, you'd have to watch your step—otherwise there would be danger. It's a cinch that if he ever gets on to me at all, he'll know all there is to know about me before he's through, and he'll know that you're a friend of mine—and, if he found out you were down there, he'd get curious, and wouldn't be so good. If you decide to go, I'd be Tom, Tom, the Piper's son, or Little Boy Blue, or something like that while you're there, if I were you. Understand?

You know how much I want that letter delivered, but I'm telling you straight now—play safe or stay at home. That's flat. Also, it's only fair to tell you that Lazzare is working for the Mask; but that you will be in no danger from him on account of any letter you hand over from me, and you can bank on that to the limit—only he wouldn't live long if it were known he ever got it. That's why it isn't to be mailed to Cap a l'Orage—where he may not be.

If you go, good luck, and a dead man's thanks; if you don't go, remember the bargain—the letter is to be destroyed unopened, and your mouth is shut. That's all.

Colin stared unseeingly in front of him. Mechanically he tore the two sheets into bits, and mechanically he thrust the sealed envelope into an inner recess of his pocket-book.

They spoke mostly French down there, of course. That was all right. So did he. A lonely, desolate stretch of coastline. He knew something about it by hearsay. Heaton Boyce had been down there on a salmon trip last year, and had described it one night at the club.

The North Shore, Boyce said they always called it. A pulp mill, or so; timber-cutting; fishing. And, separated by infinite miles, a few settlements that consisted of no more than a cluster of houses. No roads. Coastal boats from Montreal and Quebec the only source of supplies and transportation in summer—dog teams in the winter. What the devil interest could the Mask have in a locality such as that?

He'd have to write a note to Mulvey. Tell Mulvey he'd taken his advice and was off for a trip—not sure himself where he was going. Also a note to Mrs. Higgin to keep his diggings in order while he was away. He could write them both in the morning.

Tom, Tom, the Piper's son, eh? Queer! He was already Mr. Routh in the hotel register downstairs. Colin Hewitt had already dropped out of sight. But to underrate the Mask would be fatal. The railway stations would be watched. Suppose he went via Boston? Got a car in the morning, drove as far as Stamford, say, and took the train there? Yes, that would do.

The winch clattered. A boxed radio came up from the Bonaventure's hold and was swung out into the snub-nosed, broad-beamed powder boat that thumped against the steamer's hull, and that was already loaded, one might imagine, beyond the capacity of even two of her kind.

And yet, it seemed, there was always room for something more—another barrel or two of flour, another drum of gasoline or oil, a bale of this or a case of that.

Lastly there would be the mail bag. But the mail bag was not usually either bulky or heavy. It generally seemed to have an emaciated and dejected look about it as though conscious of its poverty-stricken state would never enable it to dole out so much as a letter apiece to that little cluster of houses on the shore there.

Colin, leaning over the coastal steamer's rail, watched the scene as he had watched a similar one many times before, always with unflagging interest.

His mind harked back over the four days and a half since he had left Quebec. Not that a great distance in actual mileage had been covered, as the time consumed might imply; but there had been innumerable stops like this one, for the Bonaventure was the liaison between the lone villages on the coast and the source of supplies and necessities which came from Montreal and Quebec.

He nodded thoughtfully to himself. He had gone ashore frequently, walked through the villages, talked with the people, and had come to admire them for their courage, their faith, and their simple philosophy of life under conditions that were so often those of obvious hardship—and in his heart to pity them for, what seemed to him, their profound loneliness and isolation. A queer, strange, new country to him, so near to civilization, and yet so immeasurably far away! It was—

The boat alongside, fair down to her gunwales, cast off. A figure in the bow, nondescript in dress, one arm wrapped around the plunging mast, waved his cap and shouted in farewell; another figure in the stern, nursing his sputtering engine and half hidden by the heterogeneous pile of cargo that surrounded him, did the same. There came a short, barked order from the bridge. The Bonaventure was on her way again.

And the next port of call was Cap a l'Orage.

A few hours from now—this afternoon. Colin swung away from the rail and began to pace up and down the deck. Cap a l'Orage—Storm Cape. He had wondered often enough if there were anything significant in the name—for him?

On the face of it, it all looked simple enough—to deliver a letter to one known as Joe Lazzare at Cap a l'Orage, that was all. But it wasn't all. Granting the delivery of the letter—what then? What was he, Colin, to do? Go back to New York, take up his normal life again?

It wouldn't last very long. The Mask, as witness Reddy's end, did not delay attentions of that sort unduly. As it stood now, Colin Hewitt, so far as the Mask was concerned, had—well, vanished. He had left no trace behind him, no trail to follow; he was confident of that. And to make assurance doubly sure, he was no longer even the "Routh" of the hotel register. His name now was Howard—Donald Howard.

He smiled wryly. How many names had the Mask? He was running the Mask a close second!

All very well! But to resume his life as Colin Hewitt in New York as matters now stood? Merely suicide! What to do then? So much depended on Lazzare—on Lazzare's attitude. What was in that letter? Why had Reddy laid so much stress upon it? What would Lazzare do?

Reddy had stated that Lazzare was working for the Mask—and believed that the Mask had "interests" of some sort on the coast here. Had there been something between Reddy and Lazzare that would cause the latter to swerve in his allegiance to the Mask due to Reddy's murder? If so, that seemed to indicate the way out for him. Colin—a clue to the Mask's identity through Lazzare, though at the same time being careful to protect Lazzare. That latter, as rider was tacitly embodied in his, Colin's promise to Reddy.

But if, through Lazzare, he could get a clue to the Mask's identity! A savage lust welled up in Colin's soul. There was a heavy score to settle. He had seen Reddy shot down as casually as one might swat a fly on a window pane, and his own world was shattered, his own life dependent now on matching his wits to win against the Mask. What a story it would have made! He would have gloried in it. But, damn it, this was no story—it was stark actuality!

Well, his solution, so far as that end of the problem was involved, seemed to have worked out satisfactorily up to now. He was here on a bit of holiday, that was all—wanted to see something of the north coast, and, later, Labrador, and later still, Newfoundland perhaps. Where the spirit led. Some salmon-fishing, too, though he understood that most of the rivers were privately owned—but that could be had anyway in Newfoundland.

He had merely elected to make Cap a l'Orage his first stop because he had been informed that was one of the few places well down on the coast where anything in the way of boarding-house, or hotel accommodation was to be obtained. A good reason!

And, from what he had seen in his jaunts ashore, he mentally congratulated himself that Reddy had indicated Cap a l'Orage as a starting point—no matter how primitive the accommodation there might prove to be!

All this was perfectly logical, perfectly natural. He alone at moments had thrown side glances at his own story—simply because, of course, he alone knew that he had something to conceal. As a matter of fact no one had dreamed of questioning his story. He had unhesitatingly been accepted at his own face value.

His glance traveled up and down the deck—a composite picture—the tourists making a holiday cruise to Newfoundland and back; pulp men and timber cruisers bound for various points; the casual passengers, local inhabitants mostly, and whole families of these sometimes, that kept getting on and off, paying visits or perhaps migrating from one place to another.

A queer potpourri! The rough-and-ready rubbing shoulders with the more immaculately groomed in hearty camaraderie. He knew almost everyone on board. The lack of restraint had been delightful. There were always tales of the early days on the coast by the oldtimers. Sometimes in English, sometimes in French.

And always there were eager listeners. Excursions ashore when the Bonaventure was discharging for an hour or more; a laughing, drenched party often enough when there was no wharf and there was a bit of a sea on. A jolly, carefree crowd. A vague smile crossed his lips. He was the only one on board bent on tracking down a murderer!

Oh, yes! He had fitted into his own little niche perfectly. He had no doubt of that. In one particular perhaps too perfectly! He was Mr. Howard—Mr. Donald Howard, a broker from Boston. There were moments when he infinitely preferred his own name—not for any euphonious reason!

Her deck chair was unoccupied. Had been for the last hour. Perhaps she had gone below to pack. Perhaps he would better do the same. In a few hours the Bonaventure would dock at Cap a l'Orage. The pursuer had told him they were the only two leaving the ship there. She, like everyone else, had accepted him at face value. Well, did he wish she hadn't? Damn!

He went down to his cabin, grinned not humorously at the blatant assortment of fishing paraphernalia he had acquired—and would probably never use—and then proceeded to pack his bags.

But as his hands worked, so did his mind. Germaine Tremblay. Mademoiselle Germaine Tremblay. Germaine. Well, what about her? What did he know about her? It was surprising what he knew about her!

Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the sons of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart.

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, nor The valley of slaughter; for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no more places.

And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; for the land shall be desolate.

Jeremiah 7:29-34.

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

PICTURESQUENESS

FOR so long as human nature is what it is, there will always be the call and clamour for picturesqueness and color.

Boredom, dullness, and a certain dead disinterestedness rule where there are no dangers to face, no foes to fight, no call for glamour and heroism.

There will always be in this world those terrible "foes of darkness"—and it is a good thing that this is so. Otherwise there would be no incentive to strive, no desire to rise, no effort made for a higher plane on which to stand above mediocrity and sameness.

What we all need at times is a certain "wild intensity!" We all need many a knockdown in the midst of easy gain and pleasant success. Emergencies create heroism. There are no emergencies to the well contented and the folks who want to see things left as they are. What most of us really are forever wanting is something that isn't.

We crave the unusual to drive us from the dark-rooms of our hum-drum days.

William James once said that "Divinity lies all about us, and culture is too hidebound to even suspect the fact."

A country carpenter has been doing work for me the past few weeks. He is a good worker. He pretends to be nothing beyond what he is—an honest, willing, competent wielder of the saw and hammer. He chews tobacco at his work, talks to himself as he draws an unwilling nail that has slipped under the blow of his hammer, and smiles the smile of the happy. He is picturesque to the extreme, and I prefer him to any expert of his trade who is liable to leave nothing but perfect work in his wake—and a big bill! I like to watch, and suggest to a man who makes mistakes as I do.

I am afraid that we would all wither into unimportant human beings if we did not have the picturesque happenings of life to startle our blood and the wicked to contend with! People who are too good leave so little in their wake. They are bad for the nerves!

Just Folks

by

EDGAR A. GUEST

BECAUSE HE STAYED SINGLE

Because he loved the poor of purse
And gave his hand to them,
The rich and proud who scorned the crowd

Were prompted to condemn.
Because he often stopped to speak
With people poorly clad

And sought to ease their miseries,
The wise men thought him mad.
Because by purple robes and gold
-He was not much impressed.

But daily taught this simple thought
That brotherhood is best.

The men who fancied wisdom lies
Alone in ancient lore,
With faces grim looked down on him

And drove him from their doors.
Because he knew and understood
The heartaches of the throng

And with them walked and freely talked
Great statesmen thought him wrong.

Because he said the joys of life
And all that makes it good,
And peace at night were a common right,

He died, misunderstood.
Because he chose to play the friend

To those whose need was great
And liked to share a poor man's care

He won a monarch's hate.
And still men worship pomp and power

And thrust the meek aside,
Nor ever guess what friendliness
Is lost through petty pride.

PECKMAN'S REALTY REPORT

Among recent sales, we have sold a garage property in Biglerville to E. C. Roth, of Arendtsville. A 10 acre summer home near Knoxlyn for Dr. W. C. Danforth to John F. Hamilton, of Reading, and a summer cottage for Mr. Ed. Trimmer to Prof. John A. Sheffer, of Gettysburg College.

Abundance of grapes and fruits of all kinds. Fertile granite soil, produced 22 tons hay this season. Well located in a secluded spot. An easy and good living can be made here and the price is only $1900.

39 Acres—Near Mayberry, Md. 13 acres pasture and woodland, watered by six springs. 7 room frame house, bank barn and other buildings. All fruits. A good neighborhood. Price $2200.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES
Lumber and Building Supply Business doing a large volume of business. For obvious reasons I cannot give full details in an advertisement. However this is an opportunity seldom offered. The owner wants to retire and the purchaser can step right into a profitable going business right at the time when building is starting on the upgrade. Full particulars on request.

50 Barrel Flour Mill, almost new and fully equipped for the grinding of wheat, chop and corn meal. Good house with lights, furnace and water. About 40 acres of good land with a lot of heavy saw timber. This mill with its valuable trade can be bought for $16,500 which only represents about one-half its real value. Details on request.

County General Store—Located in a prosperous county village. No local competition. Business now $1400 per month and increasing. Equipped with electric refrigerator, computing scales, meat slicer, etc. Stock and fixture will inventory about $3500, but can be reduced if necessary. Rent which includes 11 room house only $20.00 per month. This is an old established business stand and has always enjoyed a good local trade. It is also near a rapidly growing summer colony which insures an increasing business.

A Valuable Hardware Store with old established trade. This proposition offers an excellent opportunity. Stock and fixtures about $9000. Excellently located and good clean stock. Fair rental. Now is the time to invest for prices are advancing every day and customers are increasing their purchases as country and building trade advances.

Consult me for further details in regards to these or any other properties you may be interested in.

"Doctor, I'm all run down. How about a tippie of tonic?"

This is one of the oldest songs the doctor hears.

Many people think the doctor has at his disposal a mysterious substance, pill or liquid, that will make a weak man strong and transform a run-down system into one that is healthy and alert.

"Tonic," in its Latin significance, meant "stretch" or "tonus."

A tonic increases the stretch or tension of muscles.

When a muscle is weak or flabby, a tonic will stimulate its contraction.

While the effect of the dose lasts, the muscle will be stretched tighter.

The muscle will be harder and do more work.

And that's equivalent to the popular conception of having more strength.

But a tonic acts just like a whip on a tired horse.

It drives to greater effort and greater expenditure of energy a system hardly capable of it.

What the person probably needs is a good rest.

A few good nights' sleep and some substantial food.

If this treatment doesn't rid the person of that tired feeling, the conclusion is inevitable that it must be from some underlying cause, a symptom of approaching disease.

The doctor's main job in most cases is to find out whether or not there are inflamed, rebellious or other pernicious conditions existing as an obstacle to the ordinary smooth course of natural repair and recovery.

Some doctors' favorite tonics is a beefsteak and a glass of milk.

DO YOU KNOW?

$2,000,000,000 are spent annually by American men and women on beauty.

Of milk produced in the United States, only about four per cent is manufactured into cheese. Our per capita consumption of cheese is considerably less than half that of England and only about one-sixth that of Switzerland.

The word "apoplexy" is derived from a Greek root meaning "to strike with violence" and it was originally employed to designate sudden loss of consciousness.
